

I got my pets, (rabbits) from Joe Broschinsky a fellow in my neighborhood, when they were kind of young. He had the hutch already built as he got it and some other rabbits from Alth Walker. Mr. Walker came to be allergic to them, or at least he thought it was them, (he wasn't quite sure what the trouble was) so he gave them to Joe. Joe got the merit badge (partly by giving them to me) and that's how they're mine.

At first there were three compartments in the hutch, one for the food and one for each rabbit. We thought they were both male, but guessed they were male & female because they chewed out the board that separated them so they could be in with each other. Later Frank Sumner came over and told us that they were male and female. He also told us they were too young to be able to reproduce, but in about two or three weeks to a month the mother would have young in her and to separate them so the male wouldn't kill them when they came. So, after four weeks I separated them, but the female never came through.

I give my rabbits pellets and water, which they seem to like very much, because they are readily exhausting the supply, and I have enjoyed having them.
